GETTING OUT

YOUR GUIDE TO LEAVING AMERICA

by Mark Ehrman

Many people are thinking about it. This book shows how it's done.

Whether you find the government oppressive, the economy on a devastating course, or if you simply want adventure, you're not alone. Over 300,000 Americans emigrate each year.

Getting Out walks you through the world of the expat: the reasons, the rules, the resources, the tricks of the trade, along with compelling stories and expertise from expatriate Americans on every continent.

Getting Out shows you where you can most easily gain residence and citizenship, where can you live for a fraction of the cost of where you're living now, and what countries would be most compatible with your lifestyle, gender, age, or political beliefs.

Chapters Included:

- Visas, Residency, and Work Permits
- Foreign Citizenship and How to Get It
- Work and Study Options Abroad
- Choosing a Country: How Do They Stack Up?
- The Top 50 Expat Meccas
- Doing It: How to Begin, What's Involved, and Where to Turn
- Web Resources

Mark Ehrman is a frequent traveler and freelance writer whose work regularly appears in the Los Angeles Times, Playboy, Travel

MICHAEL LEVITIN
BERLIN, GERMANY

It took some time hunting through Europe's capitals before I found the place I wanted to settle. London and Paris were economically unviable. Amsterdam too Amsterdam. Barcelona a lot of beach and fashion but aside from its architecture, doesn't add much that's new in the way of culture. Prague too small. Then I found Berlin, in many ways the ideal spot for an American expat.

TAX LEADS AMERICANS ABROAD TO RENOUNCE U.S.

"For some Americans abroad, motivations for renunciation are mixed and complex, involving social concerns, political displeasure with their government and other reasons. But it is clear that taxation plays a large role for many, even though few are willing to admit that because of penalties enacted a decade ago."
